When David sets his mind to something, he excels at it, whether it's personal or professional. It's how he turned a childhood hobby into a professional pursuit - David represented Zimbabwe at a national level for fishing. In his spare time, he likes nothing more than to switch off his phone and relax by the water.

Delivering unique, thoughtful design solutions for the education sector is just the tip of the iceberg for David. For him, one of the most important elements is building relationships based on integrity and trust.

“What’s truly valuable is when our clients trust us implicitly to deliver something exceptional, and we see that with the amount of returning clients we have year on year,” he says. “It’s something we all feel a great sense of pride in.”

David’s own ethos of working collaboratively with clients to bring ideas to life reflect Honeywill’s overall commitment to fostering a robust environment in which great ideas can flourish. For David, each member of the team plays an essential role in making this happen.

“Everyone is on the same page when it comes to delivering the very best - there’s no stone left unturned, or ideas left unexplored in our pursuit of a great solution.”

Continually learning and building on the successes of the past is key for David; it gives Honeywill’s projects a longevity and thoughtfulness that transcends industry trends.

David’s keen attention to detail and passion for functional design stem from his extensive experience in project management and quality surveying, which began in his home country of Zimbabwe.

After working for a number of prominent firms, the desire to branch out and start his own business resulted in the establishment of Honeywill Consulting in 2014. David’s clarity of communication and vision has seen the company go from strength-to-strength.

Truly listening to clients and getting to the heart of what makes them tick is what David excels at. “My philosophy is to listen first, try and understand all the possible angles of a client brief, and only then come to the table with a solution. This means people feel truly heard and understood.”

David is a respected mentor and leader whose experience carries his team through to great outcomes.

“My philosophy is to listen first. try and understand all the possible angles of a client brief. and only then come to the table with a solution.”
