Stephen applies the same sense of purpose and drive to his personal pursuits. A lover of sport, Stephen plays competitive Gaelic football and hurling and relishes the opportunity to try any new sporting challenge - including learning to surf since moving to the Gold Coast.

Stephen is an accomplished project leader with over 15 years' international experience spanning both the private and public sectors.

He has expertise in project management, commercial management, quantity surveying, cost management and risk management - an extensive list that gives him an eagle-eyed view of each project Honeywill undertakes.

A great collaborator with a passion for diving into complex projects head first, Stephen leads his team by example and fosters a supportive, egalitarian culture within Honeywill Consulting.

His greatest sense of satisfaction is derived from nurturing great relationships with clients and stakeholders, as well as seeing the tangible differences each project makes to the lives of teachers and students.

"Being a member of a passionate team is truly satisfying, from the conception of an initial idea, to navigating risks and limitations, collaboration makes it rewarding for everyone and is one the greatest aspects of my role," he says.

"Listening to and understanding the everyday needs of staff and students to make positive change, can make a huge difference to their everyday experience. That's where our true value lies."

"Contributing value to a project can be fulfilling, and it doesn't always require a grand, awe-inspiring moment. Listening to and understanding the everyday needs of staff and students to make positive change, can make a huge difference to their everyday experience. It's this attention to detail and care factor where our true value lies."

Growing up around construction and having worked in the contractor delivery sector early in his career, he possesses a deep comprehension of the hurdles and meticulous planning necessary for a project to thrive. Using this experience and insight, Stephen can adeptly handle the challenges that arise during the project life cycle.

Stephen is never one to shy away from a challenge and relishes the opportunity to be a problem solver through a practical, level-headed approach. It's this pragmatic attitude that inspires his team to tackle even the most unusual client brief.
